I used a green screen to make it look as though someone was walking through a wall. This is because the ghosts of Button House are able to walk through walls in the show. I utilised Premiere Pro to make this effect. I also put a traditional painting in the background of the wall to make it look as though it was a wall in the sitcom's Button House.

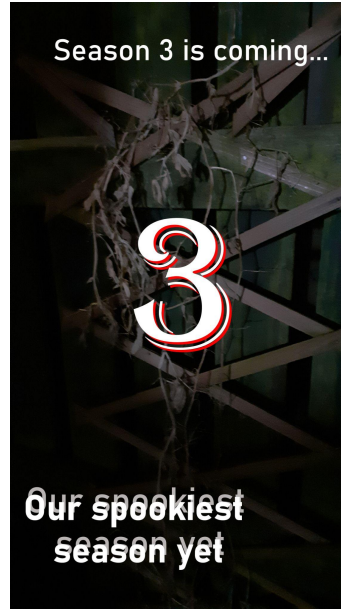

I drew a clapperboard in photoshop and added the text. My plan is to use this as a button that hyperlinks to an external page featuring a list of the crew who works on BBC's Ghosts. I then put my design on Adobe Animate and drew a background. I used black as the page's primary colour and then added a dash of red as it's the site's secondary colour. I did a scribble to make it look 'creative' to connote to the crew having the creative (behind the scenes,) job. I then animated the photoshop layer and set the colours as background colours. Adobe Animate enabled me to do this with two keyframes which I then exported as a gif so that it would repeat.

These designs were all done on photoshop. The website reference was made to look similar to the existing ghosts logo, just a different color and without any background to fit in with the websites theme. The S3 advert features one of my photos with additional text, which also features red as the websites secondary colour. The YouTube button was traced from the YouTube logo itself in the red of my website and then I drew a ghost to look as though it was coming out of the button. I plan on allowing this to hyperlink directly to the bloopers.
